The problem with that is that everyone's favorite clipart file of choice, the transparent PNG is part of the web standard, and they're not going anywhere anytime soon. You could probably put the image in an HTML document, but this tends to get a lot of unwanted attention. I'd just stick to SVG or other formats that can be embedded in HTML.

import java.util.List; public interface ToDoRepository { List findAll(); ToDoItem findById(Long id); void delete(Long id); void

"Save" option from select? I'm trying to get the value from a select but if there is already a selected value, the save button still appears on the front end, and i need to press the update button instead. I already have another plugin which adds a text field next to the select element but how can i get rid of the save option? I can try to submit the form but if there's a validation error, i will be redirected to the form again and i don't want that.
I tried to add some stuff to the form_alter function but couldn't figure out what to do exactly. EDIT: Here is the form: `$form['fields']['quick_add'] = array('#type' =>'submit', '#value' => 'Add', '#submit' => array('add_quick_list_item'), '#limit_validation_errors' => array(), '#ajax' => array('event' => 'click', 'callback' => 'quick_list_item_insert', 'wrapper' => 'div_quick_add', 'method' =>'replace',),);` Here is the

What's New In Portable Proxomitron?

Portable Proxomitron is a local HTTP web filtering proxy program that selects and notifies users about intercepting requests from webpages and servers before the browser sees them. This helps you monitor everything that goes in and out of your browser. This is the portable version of the desktop-based Proxomitron, which means that users can carry it around on USB flash drives and open it on any computer available. Colorful and useful interface Portable Proxomitron's interface is extremely colorful. It is small and holds a couple of tick boxes which mostly limit some basic items that automatically play in your browser, like GIFs, incoming and outgoing headers, and so on. Except that, users can manually edit features for a target webpage, manually connect to HTTP proxies, and access a configuration segment where more advanced options for the tool are available. Powerful web filtering features Despite the 'cheap' look of the program, its functionality is pretty thorough. Users can set it to stop popup JavaScript message boxes, freeze GIFs, and disable window popups and banner chains. Basically it acts as an advanced ad blocker. However, Portable Proxomitron also allows access to different IP addresses besides the host PC. All users have to do is introduce the target IP and the utility starts working from there. When it comes to configuration settings, there isn't much the app can do except the basic web data filtering. This lack of extra options in the tool's list of features might be limiting to some, but it can be extremely useful to most users who can't really handle lots of complex settings. Users can change the basic visuals, but only if they introduce textures in BMP format. Additionally, they can set the tool to run when a certain program starts or a certain URL address has been introduced. In case the application becomes too intrusive, they can set it to run in the system tray only.

Conclusion

Proxomitron is a powerful web filtering proxy that mostly runs as an advanced ad blocker for annoying ads, webpage popups, and other annoying Internet HTML or Java-based advertisements. Obviously, users can filter data access to and from their browsers, and stop blocking features that may come in their way.
